ABSTRACT

A power detector which samples the output signal from a communications device and produces a control signal proportional to the transmit power level, comprising a series of diode detectors where the sampled signal is divided between the diode detectors by an attenuator cascade.

Patent Application